WISDOM FROM LEFT FIELD

by Cantor Howard M. Stahl

I say this unabashedly and without apology, or, for that matter, rational explanation....I am a loyal and undeterred fan of the New York Mets. Indeed, I am a life-long fan (the lifetime of the Mets, that is). If you walk into my study at Temple you will see prominently displayed an autographed photo of Tom Seaver and Jerry Koosman celebrating the 1969 World Series victory (a rare photo and an equally rare event). I remember as a young boy being taken to the Polo Grounds by my Great Uncle Joe to watch this new National League expansion team which had the audacity to replace the prodigal and lamented New York Giants who had departed for the wilds of San Francisco 5 years earlier. Two years later, my Dad took me to opening day at Shea Stadium. After you finish looking at the Seaver/Koosman photo in my study, take a look at the framed memorabilia from closing day at Shea that Nancy made for me commemorating this bitter-sweet event. To be sure, I took my kids to a Mets game at Citi Field during opening week in 2009. My connections with this hapless and much maligned team are now multi-generational and, after 50 seasons (with more disappointing seasons than not), my loyalty is undiminished and the glimmer of hope with each new season remains a ray of optimism on the horizon.

Am I a Pollyanna...delusional...or masochistic? Am I marching to my own drummer, out of step with the rhythm of history? With only a few flickers of hope over the years and only two World Series victories why haven't I jumped ship and put my faith in that supremely consistent and much celebrated franchise in the Bronx?

There is the issue of history. After all, my great-uncle and my father were Mets fans and so is my son (and, yes, my grandson, Braden, will invariably become one, as well). Every family, every sociological group has its own unique culture which is deeply rooted in history and tradition. We Jews are no different. You remember the great Sholom Aleichem character, Tevye, who is so rooted in tradition that it nearly tears his family apart. History and tradition need to be balanced by the present circumstances and with an eye to a changing world, but its pull is inexorable.

Then there is loyalty. It's easy to support a consistent winner. It takes a measure of courage and guts to stick with someone struggling or dealing with failure. As the disheartened Israelites say to Joshua: "All that you have commanded us we will do, and wherever you send us we will go. Just as we obeyed Moses in all things, so we will obey you."

Loyalty must not be myopic or unquestioning. And, yes, there are times when the parting of ways is both inevitable and advisable. However, there is something to be said for the comfort and encouragement of loyal supporters who may not forget, but they always forgive.

And, finally, there is the palliative and restorative quality of hope. Even in our darkest days, the Jewish people has always been sustained by the hope that somehow adversity would abate and the dark clouds would dispel and the balance of the world would be restored. As the prophet Isaiah reminds us: "But they who wait for the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings like eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

Casey Stengel, "The Old Professor" himself, when asked by reporters "Casey, what's the matter with your boys?" replied, "Well, boys, I tell ya; we ain't hittin', we ain't pitchin', and we ain't fieldin', but we ain't worried." The Mets went on to win their next three games!

You never know where or from whom you will garner a piece of wisdom, but as the Book of Proverbs teaches: "Listen to advice and accept instruction, that you may gain wisdom in the future."

So let me leave you with some advice from another wise man.

- When asked what skill every person should have, he said: "The willingness to change (our) mind. It's the greatest right (we) have, and it should be used."
- When asked what role vanity plays in someone's life, he said: "Vanity is like steam from the shower. It just fogs up the mirror."
- When asked what the best way to motivate others is, he said: "With a very private reprimand and a very public reward."
- When asked what every person should experience before he dies, he said: "Failure. And everyone should experience being broke. I've been broke twice in my life, and it's been anything but the end."
- Finally, when asked, how should a person handle getting older, he said: "Continue to look forward. When the past starts to concern you too much is when you've given into old age."

By the way, that wise man was Bobby Valentine, NY Mets manager from 1996-2002.

So why am I a Mets fan? The qualities of tradition, loyalty and hope are in my DNA and, by the way, they're also basic Jewish values we ought to embrace. And, hey, you just never know!

From Insects to iPads — TBJ Kindergarten has it all!

TBJ's full day Kindergarten is off to a fantastic start with an increased focus on Science and Technology. This year our Kindergarten boasts a state-of-the-art iPad Lab where children work cooperatively and individually with this relatively new technology. The new applications available provide outstanding reinforcement for much of our curriculum with regard to literacy and math skills. It allows children to have additional sensory experiences with the basic skills on which we focus. The excitement in the Kindergarten room is palatable and the children are so eager and enthusiastic. The structure of the program allows children to rotate throughout the room in teams to work with Andrea Kessler and her team of teachers in a variety of hands-on learning approaches, which include the iPad Lab. In a similar manner, weekly science experiments allow children to work in small groups and to make predictions, document ideas, take risks and explore science ideas in a safe environment. Our motto: Everything your child needs to know to be a successful student in years to come can be learned in the TBJ Kindergarten — including technology!!

TIKKUN OLAM

The Tikkun Olam Committee is looking forward to an inspirational year, filled with new projects as well as continuation of the mitzvah work we have enjoyed for many years.

This Fall we have already participated in Jake's Ride in Millburn, raising money for Dystonia research and we conducted our annual congregational food drive for the High Holy Days.

Bridges runs continue to be scheduled throughout the year, with the first of the 2011/2012 year on October 23rd. We have added a "boot" mitzvah to collect gently used boots and coats, as well as new socks and underwear (adult sizes). Collections continue through November 15th.

Beginning November 6th, we will once again be enjoying the experience of hosting Interfaith Hospitality Network families.

Our congregation will be hosting the annual Interfaith Thanksgiving service that we share with Christ Church, Community Congregational Church, St. Rose of Lima, St. Stephens, Wyoming Presbyterian, and B'nai Israel on November 22nd. This year, our teens will take part in our annual Interfaith Thanksgiving service, joining teens from our interfaith neighbors in a joint community service project.

December brings our annual Mitzvah Mountain, the collection of toys for underprivileged children to brighten their holidays. We invite all members of the congregation to give us their continued input as to the causes that you may feel passionate about, so that we may work toward them with you.

Please contact Kristin Sterling and Jill Altmark at tikkunolam@tbj.org with your thoughts, ideas, or to tell us how you would like to take part in our Tikkun Olam committee.
